

Official opening new Berlin office

Stageco Business Partners launched a new Berlin office earlier this year inspired by concepts and technologies adapted from live events they had previously worked with.

The source of the inspiration can be traced back to the FIFA World Championship 2006 hosted in Berlin. Stageco Business Partners built a multifunctional communication center for international visitors and media utilising temporary container construction for both Master Card and Coca Cola.

In 2008 Master Card ordered a similar construction for the European Championship 2008 in Austria and Switzerland. Stageco again engineered a temporary multifunctional information center, including a journalist lounge, TV studios and announcer platforms with amazing views on Vienna's town hall.

Through the use of containers as building blocks Stageco Business Partners developed a modular building system. As a result each design is completely adapted to suit the purpose desired and therefore unique.

The attractive appearance is created by using high quality cladding materials which means nobody can tell that the construction is entirely made of containers (from inside or outside). An additional bonus has been that the smooth exterior facades are created with isolation panels and are ideal for branding.

The fact that the steel modules are custom built and mostly prefabricated offers significant savings in time during the erection and dismantling processes, whilst also affording a lot of flexibility in the configuration.

The opening of the new office was celebrated with a spectacular housewarming party for both customers and Stageco personnel. Outside of the office guests enjoyed a big fun fair with bumper cars and a shooting gallery; whilst the brand-new warehouse was transformed into an impressive party venue, complete with stage and production for the evening's pro-live bands, with a themed sitting area and exquisite buffet and cocktail bar.
